Venice Biennale, a guide

Alice Picciocchi

Curated by Grafton Architects, the 16th edition of the most important international exhibition of architecture will be held in Venice from 26 May to 25 November. The title is Freespace

FREESPACE. Free, open, democratic and shared space "is a form of public wealth that needs to be constantly protected, renovated and created." This is the idea put forward by the Irish practice Grafton Architects (headed by Yvonne Farrell and Shelley McNamara), who are curating this year's International Exhibition of Architecture in Venice for the Biennale with a humanistic spirit and an attention to a natural and social context. In addition to the national delegations – with seven new entries out of a total of 65 pavilions – there are 71 international firms that will explore and examine the theme Freespace in the main exhibition, split as always between the Central Pavilion in the Giardini and the Corderie of the Arsenale. The exhibition will have two special sections: Close Encounter, meetings with remarkable projects with 16 participants (all Irish) called on to reflect on well-known projects of the past that can serve as models or points of departure for the design of the future; and The Practice of Teaching, in which 13 architects or firms are involved in teaching present works that are the fruit of their experience. The programme is completed by two special events and 13 collateral events (see previous page).

Venice, May 25 (CNA) The Taiwan Pavilion at the 16th International Architecture Exhibition, organized by the Venice Biennale, opened on Thursday, showcasing the buildings and structures of the eastern county of Yilan.

At a press conference at the opening, Deputy Culture Minister Pierre Tzu-pao Yang (楊子葆) said the exhibition was a major opportunity for social networking among Taiwanese architects and their foreign counterparts and to show Taiwan's soft power.

He said architecture is different from other art forms in that it has to be seen firsthand, therefore, turning the spotlight on Taiwan's buildings and other structures will allow the world to learn more about the country.

“Living with the Sky, Water and Mountain: Making Places in Yilan” attempts to create places where people can easily relate themselves to all the natural constituents. In response to the theme of “Freesapce” in 2018 Venice Biennale, Taiwan proposes that architecture could transform a place, which can be achieved by every architect. With such belief, Fieldoffice endeavors to write stories about seeking freedom via architecture. As far as Fieldoffice is concerned, “freedom” is not an intangible nonsense, but actually leading a daily life that they are willing to stay within a 30-min drive sphere to dedicate their architecture work to helping people lead a better life and reconnect the bodies with sky, water, and mountain.

The exhibitor Architect Sheng-Yuan Huang stated that “seeking freedom” served his fundamental philosophy of architecture and was shared with his colleagues at Yilan as the core value standing behind every creation. To them, “freedom” is not an abstract concept, and their “freedom” has allowed them to contribute their efforts to their society within 15-minutes driving distance in their real life. The exhibition will be presented with the following themes: condensing social memories-interventions via time; setting a datum- canopy as the new reference line; returning to the land- continuum in suspension of time. These three themes were focusing on the making of public spaces, including the urban scale Canopy, Vascular Bundle Scheme and Cherry Orchard Cemetery. The result of these works was based on the learning from local residences and natural environments with a certain period of time for carefully shaping everyone’s everyday life.

How to Do the Venice Biennale of Architecture 2018

by ERICA FIRPO

May 31, 2018

Our guide to the very best of the seven-month architecture festival taking over Venice this year.

The Biennale Architettura 2018, or Venice Architecture Biennale, is an architect's dream—but it's also a design adventure for visitors, a temporary theme park for interactive and experimental works. Running through November 25, the event turns the entire Venetian archipelago into a playground of events, plus permanent and semi-permanent pavilions and projects that transform historic palazzi and parks into design destinations. Here's our guide to making sense of it all.

The Basics

The event centers around the Giardini, or the Biennale Gardens, a park where you'll find the original national pavilions, a potluck of architecture from the early 1910s to today that includes projects from Australia, Great Britain, Japan, Russia, and the United States.

Venice, Italy (Asia News Network) – Taiwan's Collateral Event at the 16th International Architecture Exhibition La Biennale di Venezia kicked off on May 24, showing the intimate connection between residents and their living environment in Yilan County.

"Living with Sky, Water and Mountain: Making Places in Yilan" not only displays the works of architect Huang Sheng-Yuan and his team from Fieldoffice, but also echoes Taiwan's presence at the global architecture exhibition since 2000.

Speaking at the event, Deputy Minister Dr. Pierre Tzu-pao Yang, Ministry of Culture, Republic of China, said this year's theme of the biennial, "Freespace" is also synonymous with Taiwan.

The China Post/Asia News Network / 08:17 PM July 23, 2018

VENICE – We live in an increasingly complex world, yet we also tend to be increasingly unplugged from the actual experience of everyday life. Far from a foregone conclusion, architects from Indonesia, Taiwan, and the Philippines want global architecture to come down off its pedestal and transform people's lives by providing additional space to local communities.

Eventi Collaterali | TAIWAN

Con alle spalle una pluridecennale esperienza nella contea di Yilan, l'architetto Sheng-Yuan Huang insieme al suo team di Fieldoffice Architects promuove il valore dell'architettura come intimo dialogo tra il luogo e chi lo vive, come connessione tra elementi naturali e artificiali.

Presentato sotto l'egida del Ministero della Cultura di Taiwan e con l'organizzazione del National Taiwan Museum of Fine Arts, l'Evento Collaterale Living with Sky, Water and Mountain: Making Places in Yilan risponde alla perfezione al richiamo del Freespace della 16. Biennale, che si rispecchia nel principio Making Places, ovvero quanto Fieldoffice Architects ha fatto a Yilan negli ultimi 20 anni: costruire luoghi che mettano in armoniosa relazione uomo, flora, fauna, acqua, vento e luce.

L'obiettivo dello studio taiwanese è mescolare vecchio e nuovo in modo del tutto naturale attraverso l'uso di materiali di riciclo e scarti di cantiere.

La mostra si articola lungo tre assi: Condensare la memoria sociale – Interventi attraverso il tempo; Stabilire uno standard – La tettoia come nuova linea di riferimento; Ritorno alla terra – Un continuum nel tempo sospeso.

In una cultura sana e razionale, infatti, l'architettura rafforza il nostro senso della realtà, incarna la poesia del reale e di conseguenza offre la percezione del legame che esiste tra spazio, tempo e cultura.
